January 17, 2007

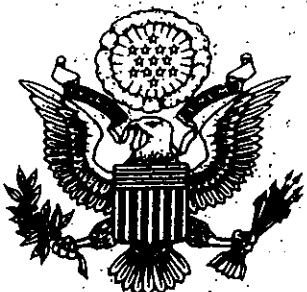

Aloha and congratulations to the faculty, staff and students at Honolulu University and all your supporters attending the school's 20th Anniversary celebration. I consider it an honor to be included in the recognizing Honolulu University's contributions to Hawaii and the success of its graduates.

Founded in 1986, the Honolulu University has produced some of Hawaii's brightest, dedicated citizens who have affected positive change to our socio-economic structure and made major contributions to society. Most importantly, Honolulu University graduates have been able to build bridges of knowledge, friendship and diplomacy between Hawaii and citizens of our global community.

As new technology is discovered every day, and we develop new ways improve our ability to communicate, it's great to know that the Honolulu University is striving to develop on-line programs and encourage the use of distance-learning to help people become more self-sufficient and empowered to make a difference in their own countries and communities.

Again, congratulations on achieving this milestone. I wish the Honolulu University continued success and want to thank you for producing many generations of inspired, intelligent and successful leaders.

Konotabi wa kokoro kara komete hontouni omedetougozaimasu! (I wish you from my heart, congratulations for this occasion.)
